TIBER RIVER

Directions: Read the passage about the Tiber River. Use the details in the passage to complete the cause and effect organizer on the next slide.

Rome was built on the mighty Tiber River. Ancient Romans called it "Father Tiber" because they relied on the waterform. It watered their land, connected the city with the sea, and helped to protect them from invaders.

There were several floods that happened when the river rose over its banks. This was devastating to the Romans. The river still floods sometimes, which caused flood-control embankments to be built.

The Tiber River originates in the Apennine Mountains. Other small streams join it as it flows southward toward the Mediterranean Sea. As it grows in size and speed, large amounts of clay get mixed in. This gives the river its yellowish tint.

The Tiber River is the most significant moving body of water in Italy. It flows for about 250 miles. Along its banks are several cities, such as Rome and Perugia. Like Rome, Perugia is filled with many historical remains.
