"These brownies are the best I've ever tasted," Sophie's dad said. Sophie smiled and offered her dad another one, which he snatched up right away. She loved baking all kinds of sweet treats from pies to cakes to brownies to cookies. Making up her own unique recipes was something she spent hours doing. She liked to surprise people with twists on how they expected something to taste. She often added things like jalapeno peppers to chocolate confections to give it a spicy bite. Sometimes she put an exotic fruit filling inside a baked good like a hidden treasure. Other times, Sophie's fancy decorating techniques wowed eaters when they saw the beauty of her work. She hoped to open her own bakery someday where she could sell all her creations and bring joy to people through delicious and gorgeous sweets.

A Dreaded Dance

Prince August stood in the grand ballroom of the palace, his gaze scanning the hundreds of people in attendance. The guests' finest outfits painted color in ever corner of the large, open space. His parents, the king and queen, were on either side of him, and though they said nothing, the prince could feel the pressure they hurled at him.

If he didn't choose a wife here tonight, he would have to marry the princess they had selected for him. Princess Jacqueline, though a beauty by anyone's definition, had an evil heart. Prince August had seen it right away, but for some reason, she had managed to fool his parents. Anyone would be a better choice. All he had to do was wander
