"Dump out all your valuables, and no one gets hurt," one of the riders said.

Lyla and David watched as pieces of jewelry, gold coins, and other items of value hit the ground around the stagecoach. One of the riders slid off his horse to collect the treasures.

"Should we do something?" David whispered.

Should they choose to...

"I am."

As they sped over to Krandle Park, all Lianne could think about was that she'd been training with the StoneMan all this time and hadn't even known it. Before she'd learned that superheroes were real, she'd been a big fan of StoneMan as a character. Now, she was about to fight evil alongside him!

They arrived at the park and hopped out of the truck. Lianne squinted at something in the sky, hurtling toward the shore. "What is that?"

But Sergeant McMann's-or StoneMan's-attention wasn't on that foreign object in the sky. Instead, he glared at a man wearing a black super suit standing on a rocky peninsula jutting into the lake.

"It's Morton Blackthorn," StoneMan said. "And he's right where I want him."

But Lianne couldn't take her gaze off that object coming closer to them. If she didn't do something fast, it would smash into the ground and wipe out anyone in range. She turned to tell StoneMan she'd take care of that object, but he was already running over toward Blackthorn.
